

Class of IAHSI - 2023

Diego Mauricio López-Gutiérrez

Electronics and Telecommunications Engineer (1999) and master's in engineering (2005) from the University of Cauca, Colombia. Ph.D. in Biomedical Sciences from the University of Regensburg, Germany, in 2009. Fellow of the International Academy of Health Sciences Informatics-IAHSI (2023 Class). Fulbright and DAAD Scholar. Currently a professor at the University of Cauca in Colombia since 2003 and leader of the Research Unit on eHealth at the Telematics Engineering Research Group. Honorary member and past president of HL7 Colombia. Corresponding Member of IMIA-LAC. Member of the Research Council at the University of Cauca. Participated in several eHealth projects funded by national and international agencies. Published more than 150 papers in refereed journals, international and national conferences, and book chapters in the digital health area. Also, collaborated as a reviewer and member of the program committee of several conferences and journals in this research area. His topics of interest include but are not limited to, health information systems, interoperability standards, system architectures, biomedical ontologies, wearable and mobile health, and artificial intelligence in healthcare.